

Jill S. Walton Bio

Vice President for Development and Alumni Relations Jill S. Walton first served the University of Georgia as an admissions recruiter in 1999 and moved into development in 2001, when she became assistant executive director of the Georgia 4-H Foundation. She went on to serve in positions of progressive responsibility in the Terry College of Business — including associate director of development, director of alumni relations, and director of undergraduate student services and corporate relations — before assuming the university-level post of executive director of corporate and foundation relations in 2015. She became senior executive director of development in 2019, a position she would hold for nearly four years until becoming vice president for development and alumni relations in November 2023. As vice president, Walton also serves as executive director of the UGA Foundation.

As a leader within UGA Development and Alumni Relations, Walton has consistently pushed the university's fundraising enterprise forward. She played vital roles in the record-breaking Commit to Georgia Campaign, the success of the Georgia Commitment Scholarship program, the creation of the Delta Innovation Hub, the naming of the Jere W. Morehead Honors College, the renovation of the Holmes-Hunter Academic Building, the e-mobility partnership between Georgia Power and the College of Engineering, the creation of the Georgia Women Give initiative, and numerous other projects that are building tomorrow's UGA through the commitment and generosity of its alumni and friends.

Walton is a Double Dawg, earning a Bachelor of Science in Agriculture from UGA in 1999 and then a Master of Public Administration from UGA in 2003. As a student who benefitted from private scholarship support, Walton is especially committed to helping students overcome financial challenges on their path to a degree from UGA.
